

Who controls REDDIT?, The #PaloAltoMafia Does!

THE MEDIA ASSASSINS WHO PRETEND TO BE BLOGGERS ON REDDIT AND TELL REDDIT MANAGEMENT HOW TO STEER THE CONVERSATION

Who Is Sidney Blumenthal?

The many roles of Hillary's secret diplomatic adviser.

 Sidney Blumenthal at a White House dinner in 1998.
Sidney Blumenthal at a White House dinner in 1998. Photo:
Susan Biddle/The Washington Post/Getty Images

COMMENTS

Sidney Blumenthal has served in many roles for Bill and Hillary Clinton, from political Svengali to opposition hit man. So it was probably inevitable that the man who whispered to reporters that Monica Lewinsky threw herself on Bill Clinton would eventually show up in Hillary's State Department email imbroglio, and in ways that illuminate the Clinton family mores. The New York Times NYT 0.60 % reported Monday on email records showing that Mr. Blumenthal was on the payroll of the Clinton Foundation at the same time he was being paid by groups helping Mrs. Clinton's presidential run, at the same time he was advising a U.S. business seeking Libyan contracts, at the same time he was secretly advising Secretary of State Clinton about Libya. Every top American diplomat apparently needs a good man Friday who no one else knows about.

Best of the Web Columnist James Taranto on the former White House aide's business interests and his political influence on the Secretary of State. Photo credit: Getty Images.

The news raises questions about whether Mr. Blumenthal's work with Mrs. Clinton at State in any way benefited his private dealings, or how any of it fit into his work for the foundation. Mr. Blumenthal isn't talking, and Mrs. Clinton's emails are still conveniently being vetted for future release by the State Department (at least the ones she didn't erase). Mrs. Clinton emerged from a month of silence Tuesday to declare that "I want those emails out," though she's helpless because "they're not mine. They belong to the State Department." Yet even the details we know offer broader lessons about the Clinton political method. They reinforce, for starters, that the Clinton Foundation is not and never has been a charity. Bill and Hillary created it in 2001 as a vehicle to assist their continuing political ambitions, in particular Mrs. Clinton's run for the White House. Any good the foundation does is incidental to its bigger role as a fund-raising network and a jobs program for Clinton political operatives. The Times reports that Mr. Blumenthal was paid to do "research, 'message guidance,' and the planning of commemorative events.” Was he also paid by the Clinton Foundation—which is funded in part by foreign governments—to write memos for the Secretary of State? We are also learning more about other appendages of the Clinton campaign machine, including so-called progressive “watchdog” groups. The Times reports that Mr. Blumenthal was also cashing paychecks from Media Matters and the liberal Super Pac American Bridge, both of which happen to be founded by Blumenthal protégé and professional Clinton hit man David Brock. American Bridge describes itself as a “communications organization committed to holding Republicans accountable,” which is another way of saying it works—under Mr. Blumenthal’s tutelage—as Mrs. Clinton’s attack machine. Media Matters is a propaganda operation that got its start with help from the Center for American Progress, which was founded by John Podesta, who is now chairing Hillary’s presidential campaign.

The Blumenthal Files are the latest reminder that Mrs. Clinton’s email deletions deserve a criminal investigation. Recall that Mr. Blumenthal was barred by the Obama Administration from working at the State Department, despite Mrs. Clinton’s request to hire her old pal. We now know she worked with him anyway, potentially in violation of State rules, and that both used private email addresses. The only reason we know this, however, is because a Romanian hacker a few years back infiltrated Mr. Blumenthal’s email and posted some correspondence with Mrs. Clinton online. Mrs. Clinton has now turned over (some of) her Blumenthal correspondence to the State Department. How many other private emails, which weren’t exposed through a hack, did Mrs. Clinton delete? The Blumenthal memos also deserve Justice Department scrutiny.

Team Clinton wants the world to think Mr. Blumenthal was simply offering his old friend some helpful intelligence gleaned in the course of his Libya work. A less charitable view is that Mr. Blumenthal was funneling information to the nation's top diplomat in hopes that it would trigger actions to benefit his business interests. The Times reports that in one memo Mr. Blumenthal provided Mrs. Clinton the name of what he viewed to be one of the "most influential" advisers to the new Libyan government. It happens this was also the adviser the Blumenthal business group was hoping would provide it with financing. Even as Mr. Blumenthal was whispering in Mrs. Clinton's ear, one of his business associates reached out to a senior Clinton aide to "introduce the venture" and seek a meeting with the U.S. ambassador in Libya. Meanwhile, among the details in the hacked Blumenthal emails is that he passed along a memo to Mrs. Clinton from an adviser to Georgia billionaire Bidzina Ivanishvili—then running for prime minister, opposed by President Mikheil Saakashvili—asking the State Department to give support to his candidate. Mr. Blumenthal warned in his memo that Georgia could be "a potential hot spot a month before the [2012] US elections," leaving the impression he thought she should take the plea seriously.

This is highly dubious behavior. In early April a conservative-leaning ethics group, the Foundation for Accountability and Civic Trust, requested that the Justice Department investigate whether Mr. Blumenthal had violated the Foreign Agents Registration Act. This is the law requiring that anyone lobbying—defined broadly—for a foreign government must register with the Attorney General. Justice brushed off the request, as it always has during this Administration, but the query ought to be renewed in light of Mr. Blumenthal's work regarding Libya. House investigators now intend to interview Mr. Blumenthal, and let's hope they can uncover more about this pal of Hillary's job as unofficial political and foreign-policy adviser to a Secretary of State. The broader point is that this is how the Clintons operate—on the edge of the law, mixing business and politics, the personal with the official, in a way designed to help the Clintons and their friends profit from both.

[vimeo 127996080 w=425 h=350]

Sidney Blumenthal - Wikipedia,

Sidney Blumenthal (/ˈbluːmənθəl/; born November 6, 1948) is a former aide to President of the United States Bill Clinton and a widely published American journalist, especially on American politics and foreign policy.

en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Sidney_Blumenthal
More results

NYT STRIKES AGAIN: Hillary read and circulated Sid Blumenthal

Sidney Blumenthal counseled Hillary Rodham Clinton when she was secretary of state about Libya, where he was also advising a business venture.

nytimes.com/2015/05/19/us/politics/clinton-friends-li...

More results

Benghazi probe to focus on role of Sidney Blumenthal - Lauren ..

Hillary Clinton forwarded unsubstantiated intelligence on Libya from a family ally to top officials at the State Department, according to documents obtained by The New York Times. Sidney Blumenthal, a longtime Clinton family counselor and, according to the Times, an employee of the ...

politico.com/story/2015/05/benghazi-probe-to-focus-on-...

More results

[vimeo 127996537 w=425 h=350]

Sidney Blumenthal - Salon.com

Sidney Blumenthal, a former assistant and senior advisor to President Clinton, writes a column for Salon and the Guardian of London. His new book is titled "How Bush Rules: Chronicles of a Radical Regime."

salon.com/writer/sidney_blumenthal/
More results

Sidney Blumenthal Resurfaces, This Time at Hillary's State .

If the Clinton campaign is the greatest hits of the 1990s returning in a Time-Life boxed set to be sold on late-night television to people with chronic insomnia, Sidney Blumenthal is that Smashing Pumpkins song that happens to be the only Smashing Pumpkins song you can readily identify as a ...

spectator.org/blog/62765/sidney-blumenthal-resurfaces-t...
More results

Sidney Blumenthal | openDemocracy

About Sidney Blumenthal. Sidney Blumenthal is an author and journalist. He is former assistant and senior adviser to President Bill Clinton.

opendemocracy.net/author/sidney-blumenthal

More results

[vimeo 127996539 w=425 h=350]

Amazon.com: Sidney Blumenthal: Books, Biography, Blog

Visit Amazon.com's Sidney Blumenthal Page and shop for all Sidney Blumenthal books and other Sidney Blumenthal related products (DVD, CDs, Apparel). Check out pictures, bibliography, biography and community discussions about Sidney Blumenthal

amazon.com/Sidney-Blumenthal/e/B001IXTPJ0/

More results

Washingtonpost.com Special Report: Clinton Accused Key Players

Key Player: Sidney Blumenthal. Click on linked names to read about other key players, or see the full list. White House communications strategist Sidney Blumenthal was a journalist until Bill Clinton brought him on in July 1997 as an "Assistant to the President."

washingtonpost.com/wp-srv/politics/special/clinton/players/b...
More results

TAGS: Sidney Blumenthal | The Smoking Gun

TAGS: Sidney Blumenthal . Popular Tags. mug shot roundup Florida FBI assault South Carolina theft Ohio Pennsylvania new york drunk driving Texas Walmart. more tags. Submit a Tip! Facebook is blocked! Featured. May 8, 2015. DOCUMENT: Revolting ...

thesmokinggun.com/tags/sidney-blumenthal
More results

The House Benghazi Committee Has Some Questions for Clinton

The House Benghazi Committee Has Some Questions for Clinton Ally Sidney Blumenthal The longtime family confidante's messages to Hillary Clinton on Libya are drawing fresh attention.

nationaljournal.com/2016-elections/the-house-benghazi-committ...

More results

Sidney Blumenthal - The Huffington Post

Any serious candidate hires his team and then has to raise millions to pay for it. When politics spawned a profession, the big money that's transformed politics no longer went just to candidates but to the industry around them.

huffingtonpost.com/news/sidney-blumenthal/
More results

Sidney Blumenthal | The Guardian

Sidney Blumenthal: Today's vote is likely to prove epochal. Bush's failure and the banks' collapse have exposed a deeply divided party

theguardian.com/profile/sidneyblumenthal

More results

[vimeo 127996533 w=425 h=350]

Sidney Blumenthal's complicated connection to the Clintons .

Live Sidney Blumenthal's complicated connection to the Clintons. May. 19, 2015 - 6:05 - Report: Hillary Clinton forwarded long-time ally's memos to senior diplomats in Libya video.foxnews.com/v/4244844083001/sidney-blumenthals-compli...

More results

How Did Clinton Conflict Interest Schemes Work? Ask Sidney.

Blumenthal was writing intelligence memos about Libya that was largely the product of the opinions of his business associates. Some of the memos he wrote made sense. ... Topics: Benghazi, Clinton cash, Hillary Clinton, Sidney Blumenthal.
commentarymagazine.com/2015/05/18/how-did-clinton-conflict-inter...

The "Sidney Blumenthal" of Energy; Character Assassination King preaches Kill-Them-All approach to media Bare-Knuckled Advice From Veteran Lobbyist: 'Win Ugly or Lose Pretty'

Richard Berman Energy Industry Talk Secretly Taped By ERIC LIPTON

 Picture

WASHINGTON — If the oil and gas industry wants to prevent its opponents from slowing its efforts to drill in more places, it must be prepared to employ tactics like digging up embarrassing tidbits about environmentalists and liberal celebrities, a veteran Washington political consultant told a room full of industry executives in a speech that was secretly recorded. The blunt advice from the consultant, Richard Berman, the founder and chief executive of the Washington-based Berman and Company consulting firm, came as Mr. Berman solicited up to $3 million from oil and gas industry executives to finance an advertising and public relations campaign dubbed Big Green Radicals. The company executives, Mr. Berman said in his speech, must be willing to exploit emotions like fear, greed and anger and turn it against the environmental groups. And major corporations secretly financing such a campaign should not worry about offending the general public because “you can either win ugly or lose pretty,” he said.

“Think of this as an endless war,” Mr. Berman told the crowd at the June event in Colorado Springs, sponsored by the Western Energy Alliance, a group whose members include Devon Energy, Halliburton and Anadarko Petroleum, which specialize in extracting oil and gas through hydraulic fracturing, also known as fracking. “And you have to budget for it.” What Mr. Berman did not know — and what could now complicate his task of marginalizing environmental groups that want to impose limits on fracking — is that one of the energy industry executives recorded his remarks and was offended by them. “That you have to play dirty to win,” said the executive, who provided a copy of the recording and the meeting agenda to The New York Times, under the condition that his identity not be revealed. “It just left a bad taste in my mouth.” Mr. Berman had flown to Colorado with Jack Hubbard, a vice president at Mr. Berman’s firm, Berman & Company, to discuss their newest public relations campaign, Big Green Radicals, which has already placed a series of intentionally controversial advertisements in Pennsylvania and Colorado, two states where the debate over fracking has been particularly intense. It has also paid to place the media campaign on websites serving national and Washington audiences. A spokeswoman for Mr. Berman confirmed that he gave the speech, but said he would have no comment on its contents. Mr. Berman is well known in Washington for his technique of creating nonprofit groups like the Center for Consumer Freedom that secretly collect corporate donations to finance the aggressive, often satirical media campaigns his team conceives. They are intended to undermine his opponents, like labor unions or animal rights groups that have tried to spotlight the treatment of animals at meatpacking plants. "I get up every morning and I try to figure out how to screw with the labor unions — that's my offense," Mr. Berman said in his speech to the Western Energy Alliance. "I am just trying to figure out how I am going to reduce their brand." Mr. Berman offered several pointers from his playbook. "If you want a video to go viral, have kids or animals," he said, and then he showed a spot his company had prepared using schoolchildren as participants in a mock union election — to suggest that union bosses do not have real elections. "Use humor to minimize or marginalize the people on the other side," he added. "There is nothing the public likes more than tearing down celebrities and playing up the hypocrisy angle," his colleague, Mr. Hubbard, said, citing billboard advertisements planned for Pennsylvania that featured the actor and environmentalist Robert Redford. "Demands green living," they read. "Flies on private jets."

PUBLIC COMMENTS: 'The company executives, Mr. Berman said in his speech, must be willing to exploit emotions like fear, greed and anger and turn it against...

From Wikipedia: Though Berman and Company does not publicly name its clients, 60 Minutes obtained a list of companies that funded the Center...

Bergman represents the ethical, business school standards of industry. Cheat, lie, pay others less so there is more for yourself. Finally... Mr. Hubbard also discussed how he had done detailed research on the personal histories of members of the boards of the Sierra Club and the Natural Resources Defense Council to try to find information that could be used to embarrass them.

But the speech, given in June at the Broadmoor Hotel and Resort, where the Western Energy Alliance held its 2014 annual meeting, could end up bringing a new round of scrutiny to Mr. Berman and the vast network of nonprofit groups and think tanks he runs out of his downtown Washington office. Mr. Berman repeatedly boasted about how he could take checks from the oil and gas industry executives

— he said he had already collected six-figure contributions from some of the executives in the room — and then hide their role in funding his campaigns. “People always ask me one question all the time: ‘How do I know that I won’t be found out as a supporter of what you’re doing?’ ” Mr. Berman told the crowd. “We run all of this stuff through nonprofit organizations that are insulated from having to disclose donors. There is total anonymity. People don’t know who supports us.” What is unclear is if the hardball tactics that Mr. Berman has pitched will succeed in places like Colorado. Already, The Denver Post editorial page, generally supportive of the oil and gas industry, has criticized Mr. Berman’s tactics, calling one video spot — featuring fictitious environmentalists who debate if the moon is made of cheese before calling for a ban on fracking — “a cheap shot at fracking foes.” But Mr. Berman probably appreciated the criticism. As he explained in his remarks, what matters is increasing the number of people who see his work, which is part of the reason he intentionally tries to offend people in his media campaigns. “They characterize us in a campaign as being the guys with the black helicopters,” he explained. “And to some degree, that’s true. We’re doing stuff to diminish the other sides’ ability to operate.”

— he said he had already collected six-figure contributions from some of the executives in the room — and then hide their role in fu  Picture

Oct. 31 (Bloomberg) -By Mark Drajem For Bloomberg- As he took the floor at the tony Broadmoor resort in Colorado Springs, the veteran Washington public relations guru had an uncompromising message for oil and gas drillers facing an anti-fracking backlash. “You can either win ugly or lose pretty. You figure out where you want to be,” Rick Berman told the Western Energy Alliance, according to a recording. “Hardball is something that I’m a big fan of, applied appropriately.” Berman has gained prominence, including a “60 Minutes” profile, for playing hardball with animal activists, labor unions and even Mothers Against Drunk Driving. In Colorado, he was offering to take on environmentalists pushing restrictions on hydraulic fracturing, or fracking. “Think of it as endless war.” —Rick Berman The fight over fracking in the state has been viewed as a bellwether for similar debates brewing from New York to Sacramento. Energy companies are lobbying against a slew of regulations, including ones setting safety rules for fracking on public lands and another capping carbon emissions from power plants. That partly explains why energy and resources companies, including Koch Industries Inc., Exxon Mobil Corp. and Murray Energy Corp. are spending lavishly on political campaigns this year. The Center for Responsive Politics data shows the industry will contribute an amount second only to its record $143 million leading up to the 2012 election. So far they have given $95.5 million to candidates and political committees. 'Dream World' Industry supporters say they have no choice. They face a well-funded environmental campaign from groups such as the Sierra Club that threaten to endanger the boom in production and domestic manufacturing that followed the shale revolution. "There is an anti-fossil fuel movement, and a very well-funded lobbying campaign is behind it," said Michael Krancer, Pennsylvania's former top natural-gas regulator and an energy attorney at Blank Rome LLP in Philadelphia. "These are people who want to live in a dream world." At the June session in Colorado with executives from Halliburton Co., Exxon and Devon Energy Corp., Berman offered companies a way to anonymously target their environmental foes - - at a cost of as much as $3 million. The recording, provided to Bloomberg by an environmental advocate who got it from an attendee, shows an unvarnished look at what Berman promises companies in pitching for their business. He said his campaign would follow the playbook from his earlier efforts: attacks on the hypocrisy of adversaries, an undercurrent of absurdist humor and the promise of anonymity for the companies behind it. The recording makes it clear that Berman is pitching for their business, and says some companies have already funded the campaign with "six-figure" payments. Anadarko, Noble "Think of it as endless war," he said. Berman and Tim Wigley, president of the Western Energy Alliance, a Denver-based trade group, didn't return telephone messages asking about his pitch. Sarah Longwell, a spokeswoman for Berman & Co., said Berman declined to comment. "We are not confident in the objectivity of your reporting," Longwell told a reporter. "If you have the recording, then you can use that." Anadarko Petroleum Corp. and Noble Energy Inc., two of the largest producers in the state, each had executives at the meeting, but their spokespeople said they didn't bankroll Berman's advertising campaign. They have formed a separate educational campaign aimed at explaining fracking, in which water, sand and chemicals are shot underground to free oil and gas from rock formations. Halliburton, the world's biggest provider of fracking services, also had an executive at the meeting, according to an attendance list obtained by Bloomberg. Emily Mir, a company spokeswoman, said it hasn't funded the Berman campaign either. 'Fear and Anger' For the Colorado part, Berman said it would cost $2 million to $3 million to run the kind of public relations campaign necessary to defeat proposed anti-fracking referendums, which have since been delayed. That money would be spent in addition to the "positive campaign" companies were running, he said. "Fear and anger have to be part of this campaign," Berman told them. "You have to get people fearful about what is on the table, and you have to get people angry that they are being misled." Tapping those emotions requires a dose of humor, he said. He played an advertisement that showed one activist blaming fracking for his overeating and another for the fact that his sock-puppet, Mr. Snuggles, was ignoring him. The ad was posted online and ran on television a few weeks later, according to a Denver Post article. Getting Message "We like to use humor because humor doesn't offend people and at the same time they get the message," Berman said, according to the tape of the June meeting. Jack Hubbard, a Berman & Co. vice president, told the audience that the work in Colorado flowed out of a national campaign that had begun some months earlier. That was after some companies provided funding to start "Big Green Radicals," which goes after environmental groups such as the Sierra Club and the Natural Resources Defense Council. Hubbard declined to comment for this story. Berman's opposition researchers, who Hubbard called the best in the nation, dug into the finances of board members of those groups and issued ads, both online and on billboards, mocking them. One billboard in Pennsylvania showed a picture of actor Robert Redford, who's on the board of the Natural Resources Defense Council, and stated: "Demands green living. Flies on a private jet." Another shows anti-fracking activist Yoko Ono: "Would you take energy advice from the woman who broke up the Beatles?" Attacking Messenger Environmental groups said they were initially worried about the attacks, but found they didn't gain much traction with the public or press. "This really is an effort to go after the messenger," Josh Mogerman, an NRDC spokesman, said. "I don't think these campaigns have gotten a lot of attention." As he has in previous drives against raising the minimum wage or tightening rules to curb drunk driving, Berman said he would run the campaign for fracking through nonprofit entities. Because U.S. law allows nonprofits to keep the source of their funding secret, it's not clear which companies or individuals are funding these various campaigns. "What people always want to do is they want to know who funds me so they can attack the funder," Berman told the Western Energy Alliance, when asked by an audience member which companies were backing him. "We run all of this stuff through nonprofit organizations that are insulated from having to disclose donors." 'Dr. Evil' Taking on unpopular causes -- such as objecting to new restrictions on drinking or food portions -- earned him the moniker "Dr. Evil," which CBS's "60 Minutes" program used to describe him in a 2007 broadcast. In his presentation, Berman said that attacking the messenger is something he learned from the unions and animal rights groups he has tangled with for two decades. "I studied what the other side did to be successful, and translated it to what business can do," he said. One of Berman's campaigns was focused against then-New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg's effort to ban the sale of soft drinks larger than 16 ounces. The mayor, whom Berman's groups portrayed as a female nanny in a full-page New York Times advertisement, is the founder and majority owner of Bloomberg LP, the parent of Bloomberg News. In the end, New York state courts tossed out the proposed soda-size limit. To contact the reporter on this story: Mark Drajem in Washington at mdrajem@bloomberg.net To contact the editors responsible for this story: Jon Morgan at jmorgan97@bloomberg.net Mark McQuillan, Steve Geimann

INVESTIGATORS BACKGROUND DOCUMENT:

berman-at-western-energy-alliance-june-2014-doc.pdf

Download File