

How White House Staff Helped Put A Hit Job on Some Business Competitors.

Wed, 03 Jun 2015 17:00:00, newstips66, [category: afghanistan, category: brotopia, category: elon-musk, category: energy-dept-slush-fund, category: google-alphabet, category: hired-assassins, post_tag: how-white-house-staff-helped-put-a-hit-job-on-some-business-competitors, post_tag: key-stories, category: lithium-batteries, category: senator-insider-trading, post_tag: solyndra, category: sony_pictures, category: worldnews]

How White House Staff Helped Put A Hit Job on Some Business Competitors.

I am going to report a story I am not supposed to report on yet.

I, and other journalists, have spent a number of years researching this investigation but, it has become clear, the stone-wall effort to keep any official resolution from happening, will go on forever. So, I am going to report it now, hoping that history will not ignore a great modern political crime.

ACME group (not their real name) were asked by the U.S. Government to help with a program. The ACME people said "Yes", they would help.

Then, once ACME started working on this federal program, they began doing better work than others who were working in the same program. Their products cost less, worked better, were easier to build, were less toxic, didn't blow up, could be affordable for regular folks, saved the public money, didn't rely on foreign materials and had a host of other values over "the other guys".

Unbeknownst to them, the people they were doing better than, were best friends of the senior White House Staff (Bill Daley, Rahm Emanuel, David Plouffe, David Axelrod, Jay Carney, Steven Rattner and Robert Gibbs) and a couple Senators (Dianne Feinstein and Harry Reid) who owned stock and options in the companies that were not doing as well as ACME's solution was.

So the billionaires that owned the other companies told the White House staff to take ACME out of the equation. The Senators and White House staff made a few phone calls and ACME was deleted from the program.

Poor ACME had been told by the Federal Government that they were just about to be winners and had spent quite a long time working on the program, and investing their money in the program. Pretty much everyone they talked to, plus the public, plus the media, plus more customers than all of the other companies had, put together; plus the insiders, said they exceeded the metrics needed in order to win the big contract. When ACME was suddenly, shockingly, unexpectedly, booted out of the program without any rational explanation, they suddenly lost the millions they had invested on the say-so of federal officials, plus another many billion dollars that they could have made from the contract. It is quite certain that they lost the many billions in upside because that is how much money the other companies, with the worse technologies, made off of the contracts they had rigged.

So ACME asked a Senator what they should do, and relayed a copy of an email where a federal agency chief had lied to them in order to sabotage ACME's part of the program. The agency chief sent the letter to the head of the federal agency, one Mr. Steven Chu, who ignored the charge completely.

In retrospect, this Senator appeared to have then become aware of a trillion dollar embezzlement scheme which these other companies, and their billionaire backers, had cooked up with the White House senior staff.

At the time, ACME was very concerned and expressed their worries, in writing to White House senior staff, Steven Chu and one Mr. Eric Holder, the head of the U.S. Justice Department. The next actions were surprising. One after the other, all of those White House Senior staff suddenly started quitting the White House. Mr. Holder refused to respond. Steven Chu refused to respond. Both Holder and Chu then quit. ACME contacted one Mr. Strickland who ran the auto safety agency. He suddenly, then, quit, too; 48 hours later.

ACME threw up their hands and went on to other business, not realizing that the gates of hell had been flung wide open.

ACME started worked on a completely different technology. Suddenly they were contacted by a company, or group, called In-Q-Tel. In-Q-Tel had contacted them, first, back in the first project. In-Q-Tel wanted to take a look at the new technology. ACME did not, at the time, realize that In-Q-Tel worked for the Silicon Valley cartel, were the investors in Google, and supplied the staff to Elon Musk, Kleiner Perkins and Google.

In-Q-Tel, it turns out, was the sister group to New America Foundation lobby group, which was run by Eric Schmidt; who was partners with John Doerr and Kleiner Perkins; who were all partners with Elon Musk of Tesla Motors; who all worked with Vinohad Khosla; who was John Doerr's old partner.

So In-Q-Tel was working on a retribution/payback plan to "get ACME back" for reporting to that Senator. They were hired by Musk, Doerr and Schmidt who all were working together on a very large White House bribery scheme involving Afghanistan mineral mining rights, solar contracts and other commodity manipulations, facilitated by Goldman Sachs. Goldman Sachs has now been in a number of Congressional hearings, and on-going investigations, involving this very thing: Mineral rights commodities manipulation. Apparently this scam was valued at over three trillion dollars, had it worked out all the way. The Cartel formed by Schmidt, Musk, Doerr and the others had taken a monopoly control of the lithium battery market and got the White House to give their cartel companies an additional many billions of dollars to exploit their rights. They also had the rights to something called "Indium", also from Afghanistan, which their notorious FBI-raided, failed, company called Solyndra needed for its solar panels (Which self-ignited, like many of the rest of the Afghan minerals. Lithium ion batteries explode on their own and release cancer-causing vapors...oops!)

In-Q-Tel turns out to be a rogue spy operation, that likes to toss the CIA's name around to intimidate people, but who hire themselves out to perform commercial hit-jobs, take-downs and political shenanigans. Their payback plan for ACME was extreme. They copied ACME's new technology via their sister group at Eric Schmidt's New America Foundation and distributed it for free, after filling it up with "bugs" and "back-doors" in order to kill ACME'S market opportunity while timing this with a character assassination attack by Nick Denton and the Gawker tabloid empire. Gawker is famous for publishing politician's dirty secrets and was finally exposed as the unofficial attack outlet for White House Press Secretary Robert Gibbs. When Gibbs wanted to get out press that was "too dirty" for the official channels, he used Gawker to push it onto the rag mill route of seedy sex scandals and other tabloid exploitation fare. Eric Schmidt then stuck the assassination attack on the top line of the top page of his Google servers and refused to remove it under any circumstances or requests. This has now been proven by EU and IT investigations. The fact that Google manually rigs its search engine on behalf of campaign backers is now a well-known, technically documented, reality.

So, while, back in the day, this story might have sounded fantastical. There are now numerous 60 Minutes and broadcast documentaries, published federal investigations, and tens of thousands of journalism reports proving that every single piece of this scandal, did, in fact take place. On top of that Wikileaks, Sony Leaks, HSBC leaks and other leaks have confirmed the rest. All of the financial records have been tracked back to all of the parties. Hundreds of witnesses are prepared to testify to these facts, on public televised hearings before a "Special Prosecutor" but the Justice Department won't allow a Special Prosecutor to be appointed because it will embarrass some billionaire campaign donors. Pooh-pooh, those poor Silicon Valley billionaires...

The public has lost TRILLIONS of dollars from the corruption that this Cartel engaged in. ACME has lost their shirts and their future. Washington has lost credibility. The Cartel, mysteriously, lost most of its rigged companies in bankruptcies and failures. Every applicant who was invited into the federal program, if they were not part of the Silicon Valley cartel, was sabotaged, had their applications manually down-ranked by Steven Chu, and lost their company and/or their income from the lies and manipulations by Steven Chu and his team. The regular folks, the impoverished goat herders of Afghanistan, lost their lives, along with American soldiers, in a war pushed for by Silicon Valley billionaires for profiteering and mining deals.

Who took out all of the Cartel's companies (Solyndra, Abound, Fisker, Ener1, A123, and, and on, and on...)? How will the public be compensated? How will ACME be compensated? Why did Goldman Sachs make billions of dollars off of the failures of these publicly sponsored companies that were run by a cartel?

Who will make sure this never happens again?