BRINGING THE BIG GUNS TO THE FRONT AGAINST CORRUPT SENATORS

DOJ, FTC and SEC are strongly encouraged to expand their criminal investigation into short selling by hedge funds and research firms benefiting politicians as bribery payola. Federal law enforcement must more deeply scrutinize the symbiotic covert relationships between Senators and tech companies and hunt for signs that improperly coordinated trades broke laws to create profiteering schemes for corrupt U.S. Senators.

Investigators have found that Nancy Pelosi and her family, Dianne Feinstein and her family, Harry Reid, Kamala Harris and her family and other, mostly West Coast, Politicians and tech companies are doing stock market crimes together. Witness testimony has been that those politicians took bribes, through the stock market, for unjust gain while harming their competitors. Elon Musk, Goldman Sachs and those politicians, being, of course, one of the worst examples.

Federal probes, currently run by the DOJ fraud section with federal prosecutors in Los Angeles, are digging into how hedge funds tap into research and set up their bets, especially in the run-up to publication of reports that move stocks., ie: “Fake McKinsey White Papers” created by Kleiner Perkins, Draper Fisher, Greylock, et al, to manipulate energy markets for Tesla, batteries, solar, etc. McKinsey produced and released hundreds of biased reports for the Obama financiers to push “Cleantech” and lithium ion batteries which Obama’s financiers exclusively owned. Mckinsey’s founder is quoted as promoting “monopolies” and “competitor destruction via lies”.

“While one is prying into financial relationships between hedge funds and researchers, and hunting for signs that money managers sought to engineer startling stock drops or engaged in other abuses, such as insider trading, the California politicians must not be ignored, protected or given a pass because they are friends with some DOJ officials or because it is “politically embarrassing” for certain elitists social lives...”

Witnesses have sworn, warranted and certified that these West Coast politicians are engaging in felony organized crime using the stock market to receive bribes from companies that they favor, and, or own!

Underscoring the inquiry’s sweep, federal investigators are examining trading in at least several dozen stocks, including well-known short targets such as Luckin Coffee Inc., Banc of California Inc., Mallinckrodt Plc and GSX Techedu Inc.

All reporters are watching to see if they hear that any federal investigator is ignoring the SpaceX, Tesla, Netflix, Google, Instagram, Facebook, etc. stock market payola to politicians because there will be hell to pay.

Peter D. Cair is the FBI’s “Elliot Ness” in San Francisco. He busted one of the early NETFLIX stock scams. More recently, Other Netflix engineers were caught in stock scams. Why did the investigation, though not go all the way up to Obama and Susan Rice and their Netflix “trades”?

The feds must scrutinize over 100 tech firms WITH the help of unbiased SEC and FTC investigators.

Toronto-based Anson Funds and anonymous researcher Marcus Aurelius Value are among firms involved in the inquiry. Other prominent firms that circulated research on stocks under scrutiny include

Carson Block's Muddy Waters Capital and Andrew Left's Citron Research. The investigations, though, MUST look at the deeply compromised McKinsey Consulting, which the Silicon Valley oligarchs lobby the feds to avoid looking.

This U.S. probe finally opens yet another front in an already treacherous era for those who try to profit on stock drops. Some bearish funds threw in the towel as government stimulus buoyed prices during the pandemic. That pressure intensified as retail investors organized counterattacks on popular short targets, bidding up shares to inflict losses on hedge funds this year. By late January, Citron vowed to give up short-selling research and focus on long bets.

Meanwhile, companies criticized by short sellers have become increasingly bold in firing back, sometimes launching legal battles even as they face government probes that ultimately support short sellers' theses. A number of corporate executives have been hoping U.S. authorities might help to further shift the focus to investors' tactics., ie: Eric Schmidt, Larry Page, Elon Musk, Mark Zuckerberg, Steve Jurvetson, Goguen, et al.

Government attorneys are trying to determine whether short sellers engaged in some form of deception -- say, by misleading the public about their financing of what appears to be independent research, violating confidentiality agreements with authors, or orchestrating stock plunges to panic shareholders and exacerbate selling… THEY DID and West Coast politicians profit from those crimes as payola.

We all know that DOJ has a database to look at every cent that moved in and out of Nancy Pelosi's 22+ family trusts, bank accounts, and investment bank funds for the last 20 years. The evidence is overt and tracks straight back to the "Enterprise", but it is DEEPLY covered up by those who are friends with Pelosi at DOJ and other agencies. Covering up such crimes, though, is a felony itself!

Hedge funds are known to strike a wide variety of deals with researchers, sometimes paying handsome subscription fees for fresh insights into possible corporate trouble, or even becoming an author's primary source of funding. In one example, prominent financial investigator Harry Markopolos, who normally makes money from whistle-blower awards, said he partnered with a hedge fund to share profits when he released a report on General Electric Co. Politicians get the profits from such deals in exchange for keeping competitors to Tesla and SpaceX from getting funded.

Some hedge funds have been known to suggest targets to researchers, who then deliver scathing reports that harm companies that Senators own the stocks in.

One cautionary tale emerged in court after Dallas-based Sabrepoint Capital agreed to pay a short-selling researcher a monthly retainer of US$9,500 in 2018. Sabrepoint encouraged him to dig into real estate company Farmland Partners Inc. The researcher, who also wrote publicly under a pseudonym, later published an article on Seeking Alpha, setting off a 39 per cent drop in Farmland's share price. The company sued and used a judge's order to force him to reveal his identity: Quinton Mathews.

The entire stock market just seems to be a well oiled scam that only profits a few oligarchs and most West Coast Senators!

Mathews later said in a statement that he subsequently “learned” his article “contained inaccuracies and false allegations” and retracted it. He and Farmland reached a settlement. Sabrepoint has said it didn’t know about the Seeking Alpha article.

Farmland also is on the list of stocks that the Justice Department is examining. Lawyers for Sabrepoint and Mathews declined to comment.

The Justice Department unit handling the inquiry already has a formidable reputation on Wall Street. It recently brought several cases against global banks and traders for illegal spoofing of precious metals and Treasury futures. As part of that probe, JPMorgan Chase & Co. paid more than US$900 million in penalties after its traders placed and canceled orders for commodities to benefit positions held by the bank or prized hedge fund clients. Those cases were brought by analyzing trading data for suspicious patterns and then attributing it to individual traders. The DOJ must GO TO THE TOP of these mobsters and take out Goldman Sachs bosses and U.S. Senators that run this MAFIA and the Elon Musk’s and Eric Schmidt’s that are their operatives!

While prosecutors in the short-selling investigation issued subpoenas as recently as October, the effort has been underway much longer. It is time for perp walks of Senators and not just the low level flunkies!

Theses inquiries gained momentum after U.S. lawmakers called for more scrutiny of short sellers following the so-called meme-stock trading frenzy that erupted in January. In a single week that month, retail investors sent the price of GameStop Corp. soaring more than 700 per cent before brokerages began limiting bets. Some organizers of the buying spree claimed hedge funds had been unfairly using their market clout to drive down stocks.

The compromised Senators have held multiple hearings on the fracas, at times discussing whether to force short sellers to boost disclosures but their hand-wringing is all for show. They fear that the dogs are on their trail.

Concerns about how short sellers carry out attacks have arisen repeatedly over the years.

The Securities and Exchange Commission and Justice Department have gone after hedge funds for running “short and distort” campaigns. The practice typically involves setting up bearish bets, then releasing misleading or inaccurate information about a company to drive down the price before closing out the position for a profit.

But there are also concerns about the impact that earnest research can have when it’s sprung by surprise on the market.

Studies by Columbia University law professor Joshua Mitts have found that short sellers’ reports can briefly induce bouts of panic selling before shares rebound. In those jittery moments -- sometimes mere minutes or hours -- well-positioned short sellers can cash out of trades and pocket significant gains.

Mitts examined more than 1,700 reports made by pseudonymous short sellers from 2010 to 2017, concluding that they contributed to more than US$20 billion in dislocated values or temporarily mispriced stocks.

Academics have been encouraging U.S. authorities to address the possibility that short sellers are laying out their cases against stocks, then using the impact of that news to quickly reap gains and quietly move on.

Early last year, Mitts and about a dozen other prominent securities-law professors urged the SEC to write rules requiring that short sellers who voluntarily reveal bets against a stock be required to disclose when they've exited the position. The professors also asked the regulator to write a new rule that would make closing a short position immediately after disseminating a negative report -- with an intent to do so upon publication -- constitute market manipulation.

Let us be clear: United States Senators are engaging in these crimes and manipulating DOJ, SEC and FTC efforts in order to protect themselves. That must end today!
