The note said: "Help me please, PMP staff are evil."

PMP are a recruitment agency used by Amazon to fill jobs at distribution centres, the Mirror reports.

April's mum Kim, from Bolton, Greater Manchester, said: "I want to know if it's a prank or if they have people in sweatshops.

"My other half ordered the calendar as a present. He ordered a note in it saying 'love from mum and dad'.

"We asked April 'have you read the note?' and she said 'do you mean this one?'

"That's when we saw it. I thought 'this isn't right'. Then I thought it must be a prank and I was overreacting, but then people pointed out all the stories about Amazon lately."

PMP and Amazon are investigating the incident after the family flagged it up to the online delivery giant.

Kim explained: "My daughter was worried. She is a vegan and she likes to know people and animals are OK.

"This is quite worrying. It's the sort of thing you hear about happening in sweatshops in China."

It comes after a Mirror investigation claimed Amazon employees were so tired of their long working conditions they were falling asleep on their feet.

Other claims included workers having just nine seconds to process a package and some employees alleging they have timed toilet breaks.

A statement from PMP about the note said: "PMP Recruitment employs over 100,000 people across a range of clients, many of whom have stayed with us for a number of years or return each year during our peak trading period, so we do not recognise the comment made as being an accurate or fair representation of the employee experience we provide.

"We provide various channels to raise concerns, including a confidential helpline, and have not received any complaints of this nature.

"We do, however, take such comments extremely seriously and will be investigating in conjunction with our client."
